Analysis of Internship by University Supervisor: Tim Stebbins
RE: Evan Brown

Professional Development

In what areas will your intern need attention and further development as he/she begins their teaching career?

- As Evan begins his teaching career he will need to work on differentiation with various levels of students. There are a number of styles of learners that teachers encounter on a daily basis. I would like Evan to give some thought to various instructional strategies he could employ to reach more students that he will teach in the future.
- One area I'd like to see Evan work on would be to expand opportunities to integrate technology into your instruction. You did a nice job with Google Classroom but I would like to see students using technology in the routine of the classroom.
- Like any beginning teacher, Evan will continue to grow in his classroom management style. This will easily come with experience in his first-year teaching. Evan employed his own style to management issues and did improve in this area.

Strengths

What strengths is your intern bringing to the profession that are more apparent to you now as he/she completes his/her student interning?

- Evan grew in his classroom management and in his confidence throughout the semester. Students understood expectations and felt supported by Evan, which made the overall culture of the classroom feel safe and calm. There was a dramatic increased level of confidence as the weeks went past in his demeanor and presence. Strong growth area for Evan during his internship.
- Evan has good content knowledge of his subject matter and enjoys the material he teaches. Evan displays a love of the subject area and that is very evident to his students. When students see a teacher enjoy the subject as much as Evan does, it can only help but to motivate them to explore the subject further themselves.
- Evan and his cooperating teacher, Mr. Reddy, worked very closely together in creating a positive culture in the classroom. This worked quite nicely for them, and is a testament to his effective communication style. Evan was focused and developed appropriate relationships with the students he encountered.

- I believe Evan to be a thoughtful and organized intern and one who provides students with encouraging and meaningful feedback with their work. Evan is receptive to feedback from both his supervisor from UNE as well as his cooperating teacher at his internship.
