

My name is Spencer Sherck, and I am excited to introduce myself as your child's teacher this year. I grew up and went to school in Attleboro Massachusetts, and some of my most vivid school memories are of the teachers who made learning feel meaningful, joyful, and personal. Those experiences shaped who I am today and inspired me to pursue a career in education.

I want to be a teacher because I believe deeply in the power of learning to open doors, build confidence, and help every child recognize their unique strengths. Each student who enters our classroom brings their own story, talents, and dreams, and it is my goal to create a space where they feel valued, capable, and supported.

In my classroom, I work intentionally to build a community grounded in respect, collaboration, and curiosity. I want students to feel safe taking risks, asking questions, and celebrating one another's successes. Strong relationships are the foundation of strong learning, and I look forward to partnering with families to help each child thrive.

Academically, my goal is to help students grow as thinkers, problem-solvers, and independent learners. I use a variety of strategies such as small-group instruction, hands-on activities, clear routines, and ongoing feedback to meet students where they are and help them move forward. I believe all students can achieve at high levels when they are given the tools and encouragement they need.

Thank you for trusting me with your child's education. I look forward to a year filled with learning, connection, and growth. Please do not hesitate to reach out at any time, I truly value our partnership as your child's teacher and you as their parent.

Warmly, Spencer Sherck
