

Off Topic: Today's feminism prioritizes performance over action

<https://nyunews.com/opinion/off-topic/2025/04/11/mainstream-feminism-solidarity-vigilance/>

I never really hear too much about opinion pieces because they show a bias but this piece I believe was very well done and showcased today's feminism. The article talks about how in 2025, feminism is starting to feel more like a show than real change.

Things like wearing pink at protests may look powerful, but they don't fix deeper problems like unfair pay or lack of child care. Feminism used to fight for big rights, like voting and birth control. Now, with growing conservative ideas and less focus on everyday women, the movement feels lost. To stay strong, it needs to focus on real issues, support all kinds of women, and work together for true equality.

NYU cancels College Republicans event after panelist requests 'armed security'

<https://nyunews.com/news/2025/04/10/college-republicans-panel-canceled/>

This was a great article about freedom of speech and how important it is to speak up. NYU canceled a student event after one of the speakers told people to bring guns for security. The event was about immigration and many students said it promoted racism and hate. Over 3,000 people signed a petition asking the university to cancel it. NYU said safety was the reason for the cancellation, but students think the school should have acted sooner and also spoken out against the event's message. The speaker later said he wasn't calling for violence and might take legal action. The situation sparked debate about free speech and safety on campus.